David has a broad range of experience handling labor and employment matters in both the public and private sector. He specializes in labor law, representing police officers, firefighters, and other employees in internal investigations, critical incidents, disciplinary proceedings, grievances, arbitration, civil litigation, and collective bargaining. David has successfully overturned multiple employee terminations and enforced associations' bargaining rights both in court and at arbitration. In addition to his legal experience, David draws from his background in working for the California State Legislature, where he successfully guided multiple pieces of legislation through the process to become law.

Prior to joining Messing Adam & Jasmine, David worked for two prominent employment law firms in Sacramento. He worked first as a labor attorney representing police officers, firefighters, and their associations, then as an attorney investigator looking into complaints of employment harassment and discrimination. David holds a certificate from the Association of Workplace Investigators (AWI-CH), the preeminent international association for workplace investigators. David applies his broad range of experience in advocating for employee rights and benefits.
